

What's YOUR Regis Story?

Lauren Fellows, RC '09 ~ Communications/Marketing major

Because she knew so much of Regis would go with her when she graduated, Lauren Fellows left a piece of her self on campus to honor what Regis meant to her. Just to make sure, she engraved those memories in stone.

"Regis has presented me with so many different opportunities over the past four years that I never would have had at a larger school," she says. "I have made some of the most wholesome and meaningful relationships, not only amongst my peers, but also with faculty. Those are things that most college students cannot claim."

As she reflects on her most influential learning experiences, Lauren recalls opportunities to apply what she learned in the classroom directly to community projects that benefited real organizations and people, rather than just responding to hypothetical scenarios. One such project concluded with the completion of a practical marketing plan for a popular local eatery that has since applied some of the recommendations in its business practices. The project really brought the subject matter to life for Lauren and her classmates, making this course one of her favorite and most effective learning experiences.

She is grateful for the friendships, personal growth and new knowledge that she gained from her time at Regis. And she's delighted to capture the essence of that in a brick placed in the plaza outside of the St. John Francis Regis Chapel, a graduation gift from her father.

"Regis means so much to me. I am incredibly proud to have my name on a brick in front of our beautiful chapel."
