“Regis has a stellar reputation because we do not compromise on quality. Our students become remarkable health professionals because we challenge them to grow as professionals and as people. The healthcare field is always evolving. The information students learn here may be obsolete by the time they graduate, but critical thinking, ethical decision-making and a foundation in evidence-based practice are tools that will never be outdated. This distinct learning environment ensures that Regis graduates are intelligent, compassionate and well prepared to succeed.”

“A team-based approach to learning makes the PharmD Program unique. Every semester we are put into a different team of five to six people. We work together throughout the semester in all of our classes. We do not receive any lectures but instead read the material before class, get tested on the material individually and as a team, and then work with our team to apply what we learned to different application exercises. This team-based approach has taught me to work with people who may think differently than I do and has allowed me to understand the importance of working efficiently as a team. If I am able to work with doctors, nurses, and other health care providers efficiently, that means that the patient will be getting the best treatment possible.”

“The outstanding reputation of the faculty combined with the dedication to service and lifelong learning made Regis my first and only choice. Faculty provided a thorough knowledge about the underpinnings of nursing and clinical expertise that resulted in my own professional development. The theory and skills I learned at Regis played a major role in my position as nurse educator in the medical ICU at Denver Health. My Regis training, both at the undergraduate and graduate levels, prepared me for the best job I could have ever envisioned - teaching new nurses how to provide skillful and thorough care combined with attention to the feelings of patients and their families. The success and professional development I have enjoyed for more than 17 years is the direct result of my Regis education. It is something I think about every day.”

Fellowship in Manual Therapy ’08, Transition Doctor of Physical Therapy ’07

“After 16 years of marriage and practicing physical therapy, both Tien and I were seeking something to bring our practice to the next level. We found that the Regis Fellowship in Manual Therapy was one of the leading programs in the country. Not only was it guided by world class leaders in the field, but it was also designed so that we were able to continue working in our clinic. Simultaneously, we also completed our Transition Doctor of Physical Therapy together. The knowledge and experience gained during that time has become a daily part of our private practice and has helped us grow and develop our business and profession as a whole. We are so fortunate to be in a field where we are able to provide service to others based on a foundation of evidence and compassion. The professors who became mentors and friends will always hold a special place in our hearts. Attending the TDPT program and manual therapy fellowship was a pivotal decision in our careers. Thank you Regis University!”
